

Healing Shame with Commercially Sexually Exploited Youth and Young Adults

This workshop will provide an overview of shame and involvement in the commercial sex industry and how it can present in treatment. The workshop will also focus on strategies to heal shame with youth and young adults who have been commercially sexually exploited. The presenter will share information on shame resilience and self-compassion.

Why topic is important: Involvement in the commercial sex industry can carry a lot of stigma and shame. When individuals don't heal their shame, it can linger and negatively impact their lives. So, it's crucial for providers to understand the heaviness of shame with commercially sexually exploited youth and young adults and learn strategies to support their healing.

The Presenter

Nicole Klasey is a clinical psychologist who has worked with trauma survivors for 14 years. She currently consults with agencies on trauma-informed care, programming for commercially sexually exploited youth, vicarious trauma, and leadership development. Nicole has been training multidisciplinary audiences on trauma-related topics since 2015 and provides guest lectures at local universities on human trafficking. She has developed several of the training curriculums that are being utilized in Los Angeles County and throughout California to better equip social service providers on working with commercially sexually exploited youth. She has been an expert witness on commercial sexual exploitation and trauma in court. She has authored two books on commercial sexual exploitation and authored prevention and intervention curriculums for the population. In 2018, Nicole was awarded the State of California Senate Certificate of Recognition by Senator Joel Anderson.
